

JABGA REGIONAL SHOW SERIES

BOSTON

ABOUT US

The Boer breed was developed by Dutch farmers in South Africa in the early 1900s. The breed was introduced to the United States in 1993. The American Boer Goat Association (ABGA) was founded that same year.

Boer goats are prized for their rapid growth rate, excellent carcass quality, and adaptability to many climates. A docile and highly fertile breed, Boer goats have been primarily used for meat production. Over a century later, these traits set the Boer goat apart in the purebred and commercial segments of the American meat goat industry.

At almost 10,000 members strong and 50,000 registered goats annually, today's ABGA offers its members marketing, educational, and commercial industry opportunities, along with youth involvement through the Junior American Boer Goat Association (JABGA).

JABGA

For youth under 21, the Junior American Boer Goat Association (JABGA) is devoted to helping the youth reach their desired potential through education, leadership, scholarship programs, and exhibition opportunities at Regional, National, and Junior Sanctioned Shows.

JABGA's mission is to bring together Boer goat enthusiasts through a youth organization that offers competitive programs to reward excellence, enhance educational opportunities, promote the value of genetics, and develop leadership skills through activities at local, state and national levels. JABGA divides the United States into five areas, with two representatives from each.

The JABGA Regional Show Program encompasses all five JABGA areas across the United States, offering young participants a platform to showcase their goats. The program also engages youth with various contests and activities, fostering a comprehensive environment for learning and growth within the Boer goat community.
